Sylvester

"SUFFERIN' SUCCOTASH"

Designed by Friz Freleng as something of a clown with his big red nose and "baggy pants" lower body, Sylvester was introduced in 1945 and his first animated short film, "Life With Feathers", was an Academy Award nominee. But it wasn't until 1947, that Sylvester really hit his stride and won an Oscar when he was first teamed with the indomitable Tweety in the cartoon, "Tweety Pie". Sylvester has appeared in more than 100 theatrical short films and in the 1950's, Sylvester acquired a son, Sylvester Jr.

Sylvester hits a responsive chord in everyone because this fantastically funny feline captures the essence of "catness". His obsessive stalking of Tweety and his outrageous antics to capture the elusive bird always lead to "catastrophe". Driven by his whisker-smacking appetite for his blue-eyed nemesis, Sylvester is a real strategic planner whose ingenuity is only matched by his foolishness. And, although Sylvester always loses, he always comes back for more.

Sylvester is a secondary character. Toddlers respond to Sylvester's clown-like qualities, while boys and girls ages 3 to 7 can identify with his mischievousness and slapstick humor. Adults and parents are amused by Sylvester's barely controlled appetite for that bird and probably see in Sylvester their own family pet.
